The object of this memoir is to trace the branch of the Carter family of Virginia from which the author is descended. In pursuit of this object, insistence has been had upon authentic records for all statements of facts; traditions have served only as guides in the search for original records. The incompleteness of the work is fully recognized, but it is hoped that its publication at this time may be the means of more rapidly developing essential facts than has been accomplished through correspondence. The obstacles and delays encountered by the author may be understood from the mere statement that since the researches were begun about six years ago, his orders have required him to visit England and Europe to make certain investigations for the Government, and later to command a Department in the Philippine Islands, involving an absence of more than two years, and that he is now under orders again to proceed to foreign service.

FOREWORD.

The great impetus given to genealogical and historical research in recent years, through the publication of rare documents hitherto unavailable, encouraged me to reopen communication with kinsmen, long neglected during my wanderings with a marching regiment. To my surprise I found these widely scattered nation builders quite as ignorant of family history as myself, possessed only of traditions, many of which were wholly dissipated by the strong light of scientific research through the musty and scattered records of three centuries. After much futile correspondence it dawned upon me that unless I was prepared to accept a line of descent by a sort of wireless genealogy, I must take the back trail and adhere to it faithfully whither it might lead.

The constant shifting of county and parish boundary lines in Virginia, and the talismanic beckoning which ever lured colonists on in the search for more and richer lands, have created most perplexing conditions for those who now enter upon the study of Virginia genealogy of the past three centuries. The frontier life bred a love of independence and adventure that induced the virile men and women of Virginia to cross over the mountains to the West and South, in ever increasing numbers, where, for lack of reliable means of communication, they gradually lost touch with their kinsmen who remained along the tide water and in the valleys of Virginia.

As time passed and some of the colonists acquired fortune or became prominent through holding public office, their business transactions and official acts were carefully noted and their descendants may be generally identified, although, in many cases, all traces of contemporary kinsmen have been lost. The carefully devised English laws concerning the keeping of records of births, marriages, deaths and business transactions, were necessarily in abeyance amongst a people whose immediate call of duty was the clearing of forests, building of homes and perpetual preparedness to overmaster the cunning and stratagem of red men, become resentful at being despoiled of their hunting grounds. The existence, here and there, of a diary or other family record, serves only to accentuate the general deficiency of reliable data concerning the first half century of settlement. The destruction of many British records of that period, relating to the colonies, has caused many investigators to indulge in speculations wholly unsatisfactory to trained genealogists. It is impossible at this time to establish from the fragmentary records the date and place of embarkation or even of the landing in Virginia of many of the earlier colonists who subsequently attained prominence, and the relationship, if any, of those bearing the same names.

When I look back at my initial efforts to unravel the tangled skein and recall the groping and floundering, I am amazed that I ever had the courage to go forward. I had entered the military service at an early age, at the close of the great Civil War in which the family, like many others in the border states of the Confederacy, had divided and cast its fortunes on opposing sides in the fratricidal conflict. The knowledge which comes in normal times as traditions from the passing generation was lost to me, and when I had fully awakened to the fact, nearly all those who could have aided in the research had passed away.

It was certain only that my grandfather had, with his family, joined the migration of over-mountain men from Southern Virginia, in the early years of the Nineteenth Century and that, with other kinsmen devoted to horse breeding, he had taken up lands in the fertile blue grass section of Middle Tennessee. His will had been accidentally destroyed before being probated, and the family Bible alone remained to furnish the solitary clew, the quaint name of my grandmother, "Unity," which served as the beacon to light the genealogical pathway in Old Virginia, and to differentiate in a family where the same Christian names prevail in all the branches to the remotest degree of kinship. The marriage record, located after casting many nets in vain, served to reopen the family trail which led literally over mountains and through swamps, sometimes dim almost to obliteration, but which finally unfolded into a straight highway through the gradual accumulation of well defined mile posts on the genealogical journey.

It was a discouraging undertaking, but with each link of the chain forged anew, an enthusiasm and a charm was discovered such as had never borne me up and on in other tasks. Historical facts, hitherto passed over in a cursory way, took on new life when treated as of the period contemporary with a living, virile generation of my own ancestors. At times the unearthing of things essential, by a process of analytical reasoning, brought a deep and dignified sense of satisfaction, while at others, equally important ends came through blind stumbling along some hidden pathway. And when worn and tired with the unrest of every day life, a peaceful enjoyment always awaited me when I could take up the thread and fit some newly arrived link into the slowly growing chain.

The habit of wandering into the by-paths of colonial history steadily grew upon me and things hitherto but dimly outlined in the mind became as definitely fixed as the contents of a certain ironbound chest, the ransacking of which had served so loyally to fill in the rainy days of long ago. And when the trail had reached back in the past to a point beyond which all was dust and ashes, and from which the imagery of the veriest castle builder could no longer fashion virile men and women of his own clan, there came a keen sense of personal loss that the delving which had long fascinated me had come to an end. But there will remain as the direct result of this patient research a deeper sentiment of reverence and respect for the nation builders, whether cavalier or puritan, who dared the dangers of the sea in the frail vessels which for a century or more comprised the only fleet available for those who came to establish upon America's shores the initial plant which has grown to include the greatest agricultural, commercial and industrial development known in the archives of the world's history.

While delving in the old records there was constant temptation to stray from the strict object of research. For instance the record of the Henrico County court of August 1st, 1685, was observed to contain this order for the first ducking stool in the Colony of Virginia: "There being no ducking stool in this County as ye law enjoynes, Captain Thomas Cocke is requested and appointed, between this and October Court next, to erect one in some convenient place near ye court house and ye it be well and substantially done, for ye which he shall be satisfied in ye County levy; to ye which ye said Cocke consents and obliges himself to the performance thereof."

The immigrants to Virginia were not all cavaliers nor those of New England all puritans. It has generally been supposed, however, that the use of ducking stools was confined to the stern men of the northern settlements. If this ducking stool was ever used in Henrico County the record of it escaped observation.

In these modern days authors are prone to write of the need of uplift and a return to the honest and simple life of the colonial forefathers. That this presumed superior honesty is more imaginary than real is indicated by the oath of office required of one of the most powerful of the colonial functionaries, the commander or commissioner of a county:

"Ye shall swear that as commissioner of ye County, ye shall doe equal right to ye poor as to ye rich, to ye best of ye cunning, wit and power and after the precedents and customs of the Province and acts of assembly thereof made, and to hold ye sessions or courts as ye are directed in ye commission or according to acts of assembly providing in ye behalf: and all fines and ameracements as shall happen to be made and all forfeitures which shall fall before you, ye shall cause to be entered without any concealment and certify ye same to his Lordships Receiver of this province; ye shall not barr or hinder ye prosecution of justice or take any gift, bribe or fee to ye intent of delaying of judgment: but shall behave yourself wisely and truly to ye best of your understanding and power so long as ye shall persist in this office and untill ye shall be by lawfull authority discharged therefrom soe help ye God.”

The search of court records of to-day for data concerning the eighty millions of Americans would be discouraging and unprofitable, but in the early colonial period they constitute the most reliable source of information. Their value in this respect has come to be generally recognized. Much has been done for the preservation of records but much remains to be done, not only of mere copying, but of intelligent analysis and connection of historically important entries in widely separated records.

How quaint all the old fragments of colonial records, laboriously penned, seem in the light of the modern way! Schoolmasters were rare in the early days, actual money all but unknown and tobacco the only currency of the colony for a hundred and fifty years. The vestry of each parish were sworn to abide by the doctrines and discipline of the Church as enjoined by the statutes of William and Mary, to bear true faith and allegiance to his Majesty the King and to disavow belief in the transubstantiation in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and in addition were burdened with many duties ordinarily pertaining to the secular administration of county affairs.

Amongst the varied and important functions of government devolving on the church vestrymen and wardens was the appointment every fourth year of "processioners" to view all boundary lines of land grants and claims, to arbitrate differences and to see that the shooting and range laws were complied with. There were no eleemosynary institutions in the colony, and had there been, the lack of transportation facilities would have rendered them inutile to the widely scattered settlers. It, therefore, devolved upon the vestry of each parish to provide for the poor and unfortunate, and, to that end, they were empowered to levy taxes, to bind minors to service, and to apportion the destitute amongst the more fortunate who were willing to undertake their care for a small allowance, usually paid in tobacco. So that while there was oftentimes complaint of some counties that horse racing, cock fighting and card playing were too prevalent, there is abundant evidence that the corner stones and foundations of a people of high and abiding moral fibre were not neglected.

There is a dignity about the old marriage bonds, used for more than two centuries after the first settlement along the James, that appeals with peculiar force in these iconoclastic days. These documents have quite generally disappeared, but in one of the numerous counties where Carters lived and sought maids in marriage, the old bonds have all been preserved and thus they run:

“ Know all men by these presents, that I John Carter of Brunswick County and James Jones of the County of Surrey, are held and firmly bound unto our Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, etc., in the sum of fifty pounds current money of Virginia, to be paid to our said Lord the King, his heirs and successors to the pae-ment whereof we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors and administrators, jointly and severally, firmly by these presents. Sealed with our seals and dated this 3rd Jan’y, 1754.

“ The condition of this obligation is such, that whereas there is a marriage suddenly intended to be solemnized between the above bound John Carter and Rebecca Stuart of the Parish of St. Andrew in Brunswick Co. Spinster—Now if there is no lawful cause to obstruct said marriage, then this obligation to be void, or else to remain in full force and virtue.

JOHN CARTER (Seal).

JAMES JONES (Seal).”

Upon the execution of such a bond, with approved security, the clerk issued a certificate authorizing any one licensed by the county court to perform the ceremony. If the marriage was to be celebrated according to the rites of the established Church, the words “solemnly intended” were inserted; if any other ceremony was to be used then the words “suddenly intended” were substituted. The licenses were not returned to the clerk of the court, and except for family Bibles and the private records kept by ministers, these bonds constituted the only marriage registers required by law, until the middle of the Nineteenth Century. Many of the clerks transferred the essential facts from the bonds to books for their own convenience, but fire and the sword, vandalism and the corruption of time have caused most of these to disappear.

IDENTIFICATION OF FAMILIES.

This memoir concerns Giles Carter of Henrico, Virginia, and his descendants, but makes no pretence to be a complete record. The research was begun for the purpose of tracing by the records the direct ancestors of General William Giles Harding Carter. Information concerning collateral branches of the family has been noted, and while meager, is not sufficiently so to discourage one trained to genealogical research and with time available for its accomplishment.

While the connection between Giles Carter, of Henrico, born in 1634, and Giles Carter of Gloucestershire, England, who sailed from Bristol September 25th, 1620 (O. S.), on the Supply, for Berkeley Hundred, has not yet been established, the results of the author's study of the Berkeley Hundred Colony and the family connection of those interested in its establishment are included in this volume. In tracing back the Carter families of Gloucestershire bearing, in each generation, the same Christian names as the Virginia family which this memoir concerns, it was observed that they appear to have been of the landed or agricultural class from a remote period antedating the published histories of their county. With but rare exceptions the descendants of Giles Carter of Virginia have adhered through more than two and a half centuries to the life of planters and stock farmers.

The branch of the Carter family descended from Giles and Hannah Carter, under consideration in this memoir, has not been prominently identified with high public office nor with great industrial or commercial undertakings. From their recorded wills and deeds, it is ascertained that they were land and slave holders, living the simple life of planters, enduring the hardships which were ever the lot of pioneers and playing their modest part in laying the foundations of now prosperous commonwealths.

Of the numerous daughters of this branch of Carters and their descendants, involved in three centuries of a shifting panorama of new states and territories in their formative period, there is but little of record recognizable to the casual investigator. It is only through a long and patient search of family Bibles and scattered records, that the history of these kinswomen and their widely dispersed descendants may be developed.

There are several families of Carters of Virginia, descended mainly from John Carter of Lancaster County, Giles Carter of Henrico County and Thomas Carter of Lancaster County, which may or may not have sprung from a common English ancestry. The scattered descendants of Virginia Carters assumed for a long time that all were descended from Colonel John Carter of Corotoman and that he was descended from William Carter of Carstown, Hertford, England. It is unfortunate that the published genealogical records relating to the Carters of Virginia have heretofore been confined to the family of Robert Carter, commonly known as "King" Carter (1663-1732), and who was a son of Colonel John Carter and Sarah Ludlow, one of his five wives. Robert Carter became probably the wealthiest man of all the colonies. His immediate descendants intermarried with many of the most prominent families of the Old Dominion, and while those descendants bearing the name of Carter have not been prominent in public life during the past century, many of their kinsmen, in whose veins flowed the blood of Robert (King) Carter, have added laurels to the family escutcheon and imperishable pages to the nation's history.

The relationship, if any, of Colonel John Carter with Edward and Thomas Carter, living at the same time in Lancaster County, Virginia, has never been definitely determined, although it has been surmised that John and Edward were brothers.

It is not known from just what county of England Colonel John Carter emigrated. From the will of Edward Carter it appears that he was from Middlesex County, England, in the vicinity of London.

There is a British record of the marriage of John Carter of Stepney, Middlesex, to Jane Cleaves, widow of All Hallows, Barking, London, 25th of October, 1611. As Cleave appeared as a Christian name of the Carters in Virginia it may yet be determined to have been derived from the marriage mentioned and that John, Edward and Cleave were of Middlesex County, England. It is certain that the Gloucestershire Carters had lived in that county for several centuries prior to the settlement of Virginia, and the Christian names of Giles, William and John have always prevailed.

It is quite certain that Colonel John Carter of Corotoman was of unvarying Royalist sentiments, and it is equally certain that Giles Carter of Henrico fraternized with the opposition to Sir William Berkeley during his later service as Governor of the Colony of Virginia, and which culminated in the so-called "Bacon's Rebellion." King Charles II became convinced that Governor Berkeley's course had been unwise if not absolutely unjust, but the families of those in sympathy with Bacon were historically without the pale of public office or political preferment, for a long period, and were amongst the first to penetrate the unexplored regions of the Southwest.

During the early colonial period large families were the rule, and, being dependent almost wholly upon agriculture, the division of land, with each new generation, reduced the probability of success of those descendants who remained upon the home plantations. The result was a constant migration of those not heirs to large estates, away from the tide water region to the back counties and later to new territories and states. In this way the descendants of Giles Carter, during two and a half centuries, have become dispersed, from Virginia to Texas. Traditions as to their ancestors are generally vague, and were it not for the perpetuation, from generation to generation, of family names, it would be extremely difficult to locate the records necessary to identify many families.

The descendants of Giles Carter and their kinsmen have continued generally in the South. A notable exception to this occurred in the family of Richard Everard Bennett, of "Poplar Mount," Halifax County, whose wife was Ann Carter, daughter of Theodrick (Third) and Judith Cunningham Carter. A son of this marriage, Richard E. Bennett, Jr., moved to Illinois, and the senior surviving member of this family now (1909) bears the name Theodrick

Carter Bennett, his mother Maria Carter having been a first cousin of his father. Although born in Illinois, Theodrick Carter Bennett, being on a visit to his Carter kinsmen in Texas at the outbreak of the Civil War, joined Terry's Texas Rangers and continued in the Confederate Army to the end, when he returned to Illinois.

One of the Bennett descendants, Judge Walter Bennett Seates, succeeded Judge Lyman Trumbull as Justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois when Trumbull was elected to the United States Senate. He served in the Union Army as a lieutenant-colonel on the staff of General McClelland.

Doctor Walter Bennett, the progenitor of this family in Virginia, left a journal of his travels, and for his son Richard Everard Bennett, a recipe book in which appears a strange commingling of medical prescriptions for the human kind and animals; and records of births and deaths of children interspersed with entries such as these:

“North American, a sorrel horse-colt, foaled on Tuesday the 17th day of April, 1810 out of Nancy Maid, a bay mare purchased of Mr. Baird, Esq., got by gray Diomed, his dam by North Britain who was imported by John Baird Esq.”

To accurately and definitely trace a line of family descent court records are the most valuable because usually made under oath and presumably accurate. Family Bibles appear to be next in accuracy, as to births in Virginia families, because the entries in church parish records show indubitably that the data concerning their scattered parishioners was collected by the ministers from time to time and not as records of each individual birth. Frequently all the children of a family are found as successive entries in parish registers, although the series of births may have covered many years. Marriage and death records are apt to be accurate, because usually entered at the time of the events.

The perpetuation of Christian names serves to greatly facilitate the identification of families in all records and contemporary history. In the several families of Carters of Virginia, certain Christian names peculiar to each family occur in each generation, while other names, such as John and Robert, are quite common in all the families even where no relationship exists. Giles and Theodrick have not been found in any other branch of the Carter family, although one or both have appeared in each generation of the branch which this memoir concerns, from Giles, the immigrant, down to the present generation. During one generation, 1775 to 1800, there were no less than seven members of this family bearing the name of Theodrick Carter. Giles or Gyles Carter has been found continuously, back to the most ancient records of Gloucestershire, England, and has not been identified with any of the other Carter families in England.

While perpetuation of Christian names serves to identify families, it also leads at times to serious embarrassment, from the viewpoint of the genealogist, unless contemporary records are available to unravel the multiplication of identical names. As an instance of this, Theodrick Carter (First), a son of Giles Carter, had two sons named Theodrick (Second) and John. Theodrick Carter (Second) named his first three sons John, Theodrick and William. His brother John named his first three sons Theodrick, John and William. Each of these two brothers honored the other by naming his first son after the brother, the second being given his own father's name and the third in each case being named William. The wills of Theodrick (Second) and John served to unravel this confusion of names.

Certain parish, colonial and county records aid in identification of individuals. The date of death of Giles Carter (Second) is not known. The last record concerning him in the locality where he was born and lived is found in the following record of a vestry meeting held at Curl's Church, for Henrico Parish, the sixth day of December, Ano. 1735:

“ Pursuant to an act of Assembly of this colony, and in obedience to the order of Henrico County Court, made at a court held for ye said county, this first day of December, Ano. 1735: The vestry do order that John Cocke, Gerrard Ellyson and Giles Carter, with the assistance of the neighboring freeholders, do sometime before the last day of March next coming, goe in procession and renew the lines of all lands from Boar Swamp on Chickahominy Swamp, to the lower bounds of ye parish, thence southerly to the place where the Long Bridge road parts with Bottom Bridge road, and that the said John Cocke, Gerrard Ellyson and Giles Carter (or any two of them), do take and return to their parish vestry, an account of every person’s lands by them processioned, and the persons present at the same, and of all land in their precinct they shall fail to procession, and the particular reasons for such failure.”

An act of the general assembly of Virginia was passed in October, 1786, for clearing and extending the navigation of the Chickahominy River, and William Carter, a descendant of Giles Carter (First), was one of a committee of trustees appointed to supervise the clearing of the channel as far up as Meadow Bridge.

An act of the general assembly was passed December 21, 1795, under which Everard Meade, Joseph Eggleston, Ryland Randolph, Edmund Harrison, Richard Venable, John Epperson, Francis Eppes, Henry Skipwith, Buller Claibourne, Samuel Carter, James Wade and other gentlemen were appointed "trustees for clearing, improving and extending the navigation of the Appomatox River from Banister's Mills as far up the same as they may judge it practicable, so as to have a sufficient depth and width of water to navigate boats, batteaus or canoes capable of carrying eight hogsheads of tobacco." Samuel Carter who was named as one of the trustees was a son of Theodrick (Second) and Anne Carter. Samuel's brother Waddill married Mildred, a daughter of James Wade, who was also named as one of the trustees.

At the Halifax County, Virginia, court, held in November, 1799, the following was ordered and made of record:

"Theodrick Carter, Gentleman, is recommended to his Excellency, the Governor or Chief Magistrate, for the time being, as a fit person to execute the office of Sheriff of this County for the ensuing year."

He filled the office for two successive terms. His identification aided materially in clearing up a tangled procession of Theodricks in that generation.

The last but one in the branch of the family herein traced, to bear the name of Theodrick, and who was Theodrick (Sixth) in direct line, entered the Confederate service from Tennessee at twenty-one years of age and accompanied General Zollicofer to Kentucky. Subsequent to the death of his chief at the battle of Mill Springs, Kentucky, he served as captain and A. D. C. upon the staff and accompanied Hood's army on its march north for Nashville in 1864. The battle of Franklin was peculiarly fatal to the Confederate Army in its loss of officers and none was more tragic than that of young Theodrick Carter, thus described by General J. D. Cox, U. S. Volunteers, in his history of the battles of Franklin and Nashville:

“ But even civil war rarely furnishes so sad a story as that which the Carter family have to tell. The house was occupied by an elderly man and his two daughters. . . . The battle, when it came, broke upon them so suddenly that they did not dare to leave, and they took refuge in the cellar. The house was in the focus of the storm which raged about it for hours. . . . The long night ended at last, and with the first light the young women found relief in ministering to the wounded who had crept into the house and out-buildings, and in carrying water to those on the field. But, as they climbed the parapet at the rear of the house, among the first they found was a young staff officer, their own brother, mortally wounded, lying, as he had fallen at sunset, almost at the door of his home.” *

The name of Waddill appeared in the fourth generation of the Carter family in Virginia, as a Christian name. It is believed to have been introduced through the marriage of Theodrick Carter (Second) with Anne Waddill. A daughter of this marriage was named Anne Waddill and a son named Waddill. John Carter, a son of Theodrick (Second) and Anne, named his first daughter Anne Waddill. The Waddills lived in St. Peter's Parish for many years, as shown by the register and other parish records. William Waddill, Sr., was a vestryman and also church warden of St. Peter's Parish. His name was spelled Waddell in all the records until the meeting of August 18th, 1704, after which it was always spelled Waddill until it disappears from the vestry proceedings, the last entry being at the meeting of October 8th, 1737. William Waddill, son of William Waddill, was baptized April 29th, 1694. William Waddill was a witness to the will of John Carter's father, Theodrick Carter (Second). One of the witnesses to the will of John Carter of Halifax was Noel Waddill.

*The mortality amongst the Confederate generals at Franklin included General John C. Carter, and was unparalleled in any other battle of the war. It is said to have resulted from an impatient remark of General Hood, over the failure to crush the Federal Army before reaching Franklin, which caused the generals and other officers to recklessly expose themselves in the battle which followed.

Other Christian names are traced less directly. The old Henrico records show " Mr. Robert Woodson, Mr. Richard Ferris, Mr. Giles Carter, William Ferris and Roger Comins," as partners in a land grant.

At the date of taking the census of 1625, John Woodson, who came over in " The George " in 1619, and his wife Sarah, lived at Flower de Hundred, on the south side of the James. A son Robert married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Ferris, and had issue: John, Robert, Richard, Joseph, Benjamin and Elizabeth, who married John Pleasants. A son of Richard, also named Richard, married Anne Michaux. Anne Michaux Woodson had two daughters; one, Elizabeth, married Nathaniel Venable and the other, Agnes, married Francis Watkins, Clerk of Prince Edward County.

Nathaniel Venable and Francis Watkins were executors of and Agnes Watkins a witness to the will of Theodrick Carter (Second) which was probated January 19th, 1777. The second Theodrick's son, John Carter, named one son Francis Watkins, one Richard and one Robert. Robert Carter named one son Robert Michaux and a daughter Sarah Venable. The second Theodrick Carter's son, Theodrick (Third), named a son Nathaniel.

Abraham Venable, who married Elizabeth Michaux, daughter of Jacob Michaux, was a witness to the will of Waddill Carter, son of Theodrick Carter (Second). Martha Venable, a sister of Abraham, married John Holcomb of Prince Edward County, Virginia. Samuel Venable, son of Abraham and Elizabeth Michaux Venable, married Ann Anderson, daughter of Thomas Anderson of Mecklenburg County, Virginia. Francis Watkins Carter married Sarah Holcomb Anderson.

Samuel was given as a Christian name by Theodrick Carter (Second) to one of his sons and has been perpetuated to the present generation.

It appears from the English and Virginia records that Giles, John and William have come as Christian names through many generations of Carters in Gloucestershire, England; that Theodrick has been a favorite name since about 1650, in Virginia, and that Richard, Robert, Waddill, Samuel, Nathaniel and Francis have come through association with the Michaux, Waddills, Venables and Watkins in Virginia.

In examining the old records the writer was particularly interested to find that in Gloucestershire, England, one of the daughters of Giles Carter had married William Harding in the Sixteenth Century; that contemporaries bearing the names of Giles Carter and William Harding were in Henrico County, Virginia, with the Gloucestershire settlers in the early part of the Eighteenth Century, and that in the Twentieth Century the writer should bear the name of William Giles Harding Carter.

DIRECT LINE OF DESCENT.

The plan followed in developing the line of descent has been to trace back, generation by generation, to Giles Carter, who was born in 1634. Having followed out the immediate line to its source in America, the course was then reversed, and beginning with Giles Carter, the line of descent was proved and information of record concerning collateral branches was noted and analyzed.

In the pursuit of the information necessary to work out the completed chain, and to accomplish the identification of individuals and families, it was sometimes necessary to draw deductions from scanty and widely dispersed details. By a process of elimination and comparison the direct line was finally established and this has been followed by persistent examination of records and contemporary biographical and historical writings.

The first Giles Carter of whom there is any record in Virginia came from Gloucestershire, England, with William Tracy on the Supply, which sailed from Bristol September 24th, 1620 (O. S.), and arrived at Berkeley January 29th, 1621 (O. S.). After looking over the situation Giles Carter returned to England immediately before or just after the Indian massacre of Friday, April 1st, 1622. The Carter family of Gloucestershire, England, in which Gyles or Giles appears as a Christian name, was connected with the Tracy family by the marriage of Giles Carter and Elizabeth Tracy. This Giles was a son of John Carter of Lower Swell, who was High Sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1612. The family and its connections are considered in a separate chapter, for the reason that in the fragmentary state of the published records of that early period, it has not yet been practicable to identify the parents of Giles Carter who was born in 1634, who lived at Turkey Island during Bacon's Rebellion, and whose will is preserved in Henrico County, Virginia. From the incomplete records of the first half century of colonization in Virginia, it is difficult to find continuous and accurate data of even those who bore the most prominent part in colonial affairs.

Beginning with Giles Carter of Henrico County, Virginia, whose descendants are traced in this memoir, the recorded wills have been preserved and the direct line of descent is traced by means of these wills and other county records and family Bibles.

The records of Henrico County, Virginia, establish, in a deposition, that Giles Carter was born in 1634. At the period of Bacon's Rebellion he was the intimate friend of Colonel James Crewe of Turkey Island, Henrico County, one of Bacon's active and prominent adherents. For his participation in Bacon's Rebellion Colonel James Crewe was tried by court-martial and sentenced to be hanged.

The record of the proceedings of the court-martial which tried Colonel James Crewe has been preserved as follows:

“ At a Court-martial held at Green Spring the 24th day of January 1676-7.

“ Present Sir William Berkeley, Knt. Governor and Captain General of Virginia.

Colonel Bacon Colonel Ludwell Colonel Ramsey
Colonel Ballard Colonel Claiborne Major Page.
Colonel West Colonel Hill

“ James Crewes being brought before the Court for treason and rebellion against his most sacred majestie, and pleading nothing in his defence, and the court being very sensible that the said Crewes was a most notorious actor, aydor and assistor in the rebellion therefore the court are unanimously of opinion, and doe adjudge him guilty of the accusation: Sentence of death, therefore past upon him to returne to the prison from which he came, and from thence (on Friday next) to be carryed to the galloves, there to be hanged until he be dead.”

It is not known in detail just what part Colonel Crewe took in Bacon's Rebellion, but when the Virginia Assembly passed an act granting pardon to those who had participated in it, he and about fifty others were excluded.

Subsequent to his execution a bill of attainder was passed, which contained this final proviso:

“ Provided always, and it is the true intent and meaning of the act, that the severall estates of the severall persons herein mentioned to be convicted and stand attainted of high treason, shall only be inventoried and security taken that the same shall not be embezzled, and upon such security, the said estates nor any parte thereof shall not be removed, but shall remaine and be in the hands of the person or persons now possessing the same untill the King's majesties further pleasure shall be signified therein.”

The act of attainder was repealed by proclamation July 8th, 1680.

Sir William Berkeley, in his report of those executed, says: “ Condemned at my house (Green Spring) and executed when Bacon lay before Jamestown:

“ 1. Colonel Crewe, Bacon's parasyte, that continually went about ye country, extolling all Bacon's actions, and justifying his rebellion.”

The exclusion of Crewe from amnesty after he had been executed was of little moment except to his heirs. The wise provisions of the bill of attainder are now believed to have been inserted to secure estates to rightful heirs and to prevent Governor Berkeley from personally confiscating them. Viewed in the light of documents since made public, Colonel Crewe was a patriotic, self-respecting gentleman. He was officially slain by the verdict of a court-martial assembled to do the bidding of an irascible and vindictive governor, who appeared willing to sacrifice the lives and property of the English planters that his own interests in the Indian trade might continue undisturbed. Many descendants of members of the court were to be found among the colonists who contended on the field of battle, one hundred years later, for the principles laid down by Bacon and Crewe in 1676.*

The career of Colonel James Crewe is of particular interest because of the provisions of his will relating to Giles Carter and his family. The will of James Crewe was executed the 23d of July, 1676, and proved before the Henrico County court the 10th of December, 1677. The name is spelled Crews by the clerk of the court, except the record of the signature which is Crewes. The spelling used by Governor Berkeley—Crewe—conforms to that in the Gloucestershire records of this family. He appears to have been “ Captain ” Crewe from the recorded will, but was designated as “ Colonel ” by Governor Berkeley.

* Early in his investigations the author became imbued with the opinion that Bacon's adherents had been misrepresented from the very inception of trouble with the Indians, and had been treated with marked disfavor and injustice by Sir William Berkeley, producing a dissatisfaction which remained as an open wound in the body politic long after Berkeley had been deposed from the office of governor. After a study of all available documents relating to that period the author's opinion became a conviction, and he prepared a monograph on Bacon's Rebellion, and, upon its completion, learned that Eggleston had already published "Bacon the Patriot," based upon a similar study.

Colonel James Crewe appointed his cousin Mathew Crewe of England sole executor. There is an entry in the Henrico County records stating that administration on the estate was granted to Mr. William Sherwood, attorney for Rowland Place Esquire, who was attorney for Mathew Crewe gent., son of Francis Crewe, deceased, brother of Colonel James Crewe; and to Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Grendon, attorney for Sarah Whittingham, sole daughter of Edward Crewe, brother to Colonel James Crewe, the heirs living in England.

The estate of James Crewe, known as Turkey Island, was on the James River between Shirley and Bremo, the latter the residence of the Cocks family for two hundred years. Turkey Island received its name from the large number of wild turkeys found there by the first party sent up the river from the colony at Jamestown. The estate was sold by James Crewe's heirs in 1684 to William Randolph.

By an indenture made the 25th of February, 1684-5, Giles Carter, "planter," and his wife Hannah transferred their rights in a parcel of land pertaining to the Turkey Island plantation of Colonel James Crewe, to William Randolph. By his will Colonel Crewe had transferred the land to Giles Carter during his lifetime for "one grain of Indian corn." The estate of Colonel James Crewe was settled by the court held June 1st, 1686, the various legacies to Giles Carter's family being then approved and paid.

It is not known just when Colonel Crewe arrived in Virginia. The records show that he was a witness to a receipt given by Thomas Hallam April 14th, 1656, and recognized in court June 25th, 1656.

It has not been determined just when Giles Carter, who was associated with Colonel James Crewe, arrived in Virginia. There is a deposition recorded in Henrico County, Virginia, which states, on behalf of Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Grendon, that he loaned a rapier to Colonel James Crewe "once when he was going to England." The date of this visit can not be determined, but it seems probable from subsequent incidents and records that Giles Carter and his family returned with Crewe and were still at his plantation when the Indian troubles preceding Bacon's Rebellion began.

Giles Carter received grants of land for the expense of bringing a number of immigrants to Virginia, but their names, as shown in the court records and grants, are not found in any of the published lists of persons sailing from ports of England, the records of which are intact. This fact strengthens the evidence that Giles Carter and the group affiliated with him at the time of Bacon's Rebellion and afterwards, were from Gloucestershire and sailed from Bristol as did the first Giles Carter who came on the Supply. The only records of sailings from Bristol preserved are those of the Margaret and the Supply, found with the private papers of John Smyth of Nibley. Both ships were chartered for the Berkeley Hundred Colony.

The will of Colonel James Crewe contained, amongst other provisions, the following: "I give unto Hannah, wife of Giles Carter, my negro maid Kate forever and her increase," and in event of the death of Hannah Carter, the woman Kate was to become the property of Theodrick, son of Giles and Hannah Carter. Mary and Susan, daughters of Giles and Hannah Carter, each received under the will "ten thousand pounds of tobacco," and minor legacies. Many of the old wills make provision for mourning rings and other small gifts for personal friends. Such generosity as Colonel Crewe bestowed upon Giles and Hannah Carter and their children was generally reserved for kinsmen.

There are many entries in the old records of Virginia concerning Giles Carter and his descendants, extracts of which are included to show their early land holdings and family connections.

In the records of Henrico County, Virginia, is a list of tythables, in 1679, residing in the old settlements of Bermuda Hundred, Curls and Turkey Island. At the last named place the list includes:

Richard Coeke	5
William Randolph	5
Giles Carter	6
Thomas Coeke	8
William Coeke	2

The record recites:

“An account of the several forty tythables, ordered by this worshipful court to fitt out man and horse and arms, etc., according to act.”

The act referred to required that a man and horse should be provided for service in the militia by each forty tythables. The numbers opposite each name indicated the numbers of persons for whose poll tax each was responsible.

Giles Carter was appointed by the court August 15th, 1681, as one of the persons to appraise an estate.

William Cocke, of Henrico County, recorded a deed of a parcel of land sold February 28th, 1684, to Giles Carter, "said land lying upon Turkey Island Mill Run and beginning at the upper beaver dam on said River."

Giles Carter was appointed by the court, February 1st, 1685, as an appraiser of the estate of John Clyburn, deceased.

The records of the court held at Varina for Henrico County, Virginia, June 1st, 1687, contain the following:

"Upon the petition of Giles Carter, certificate is granted unto him for eight hundred (800) acres of land due for ye importacion of these sixteen (16) persons under written, being legally proved in court; viz:

Jonathan Cocke	Cornelius Orts	William Wheeler
Philip Marshall	John Green	Nicholas Lund
Mary Allen	Mary Richards	John Bengany
John Holmes	Moses Martin	Thomas Smeethers
Elianor Bushell	Jno. Cocks	Rachel Lockerson."
Katherine Price

An order of the same court appointed Giles Carter as an appraiser of and to divide the estate of Will Humphrey, deceased.

Amongst the recorded land patents in Virginia is a grant, dated October 21st, 1687, for 1875 acres in the Parish of Varina, at the White Oak Swamp, on the north side of the James, to “ Mr. Robert Woodson, Mr. Richard Ferris, Mr. Giles Carter, William Ferris and Roger Comins.” This patent was issued in October, 1688, and signed by Francis Lord Howard, Baron of Effingham. Roger Comins having died and William Ferris having failed to pay any part of the charges accruing, the land was divided among the three remaining, Giles Carter’s share being 552 acres lying along the main run of White Oak Swamp. This land was granted for having brought emigrants to the colony, among them being John Strong, Jno. Hickson, Geo. Swallow, Moses Reese, Jno. Worthy, Antho. Gant, Wm. Norris, Dan’ll Waller, Tho. Adcock, Tho. Clark, Ed Davehill and others, thirty-six in all. By his will, one hundred years after the granting of this patent, John Carter, a grandson of Giles, gave a piece of land described as at the White Oak Swamp to his son and namesake John Carter, Jr.

The will of Giles Carter, father of Theodrick Carter (First) and of Giles Carter (Second), was executed the 14th day of December, 1699, and is recorded in Henrico County. The witnesses who proved the will were Thomas Smythes, William T. Sewell and James D. Davis. The will names his wife Hannah; son Theodrick; daughter Susanna, wife of Thomas Williamson; daughter Mary, wife of Thomas Davis; daughter Ann, wife of James Davis; son Giles, Jr., who was under eighteen years of age when the will was executed. The will was probated February 2d, 1701-2, Hannah Carter being, under its provisions, sole executrix. After devising a few minor legacies including a "phillie" or young mare to his namesake, Giles, Jr., he directed that upon the lad's arriving at eighteen years of age he should divide the estate with his mother, but that she should not be disturbed in her possession of the plantation during her lifetime.*

A deed was recorded at the court held at Varina December 10th, 1701, for 550 acres of land sold by

* John Rolfe, when in England with Pocahontas, wrote a letter to King James concerning the plantations in Virginia which contains the following:

"At Henrico, on the north side of the river, ninety odd myles from the mouth thereof, and within fifteen or sixteen miles of the Falls or head of that river (being our furthest habitation within the land) are thirty-eight men and boyes, whereof twenty-two are farmers, the rest officers and others all whom maintayne themselves with food and apparell. Of this towne one Captain Smaley hath the command in the absence of Captain James Davis."

The abstract of Virginia land patents shows:

"Thomas Davis planter, son and heir of James Davis, late of Henrico in Virginia, gentleman, deceased, 300 acres in Warwicksqueake on Warwicksqueake Creek; due 100 acres in right of the said James Davis, his father, an ancient planter, for the transportation of two servants into the country, (viz) George Cooke and Alice Mulleins, who came in the George in 1617; 100 acres in right of Rachel Davis for her personal dividend, an ancient planter. Granted by Harvey 6 March, 1633."

John Coeke, of Oldman's Creek, Charles City County, to Thomas Williamson, husband of Susanna, daughter of Giles and Hannah Carter. The land was described as a parcel sold by Giles Carter, Sr., to Coeke.

The will of Giles Carter names two sons, Theodrick Carter (First) and Giles Carter, Junior. The records of Henrico County, Virginia, show that Theodrick Carter (First) transferred March 2d, 1701, to John Pleasants certain land called the Low Grounds lying on the north side of James River "on Run of Turkey Island Creek," for ten thousand pounds of tobacco. This land was devised to Theodrick Carter (First) by the will of his father Giles Carter. Theodrick Carter (First) bought from John Pleasants, at the same time, the property known as "Round Hills," on the south side of the Chickahominy Swamp. This Round Hills land serves later to identify John, the son of Theodrick Carter (First), to whom it was willed.*

The will of Theodrick Carter (First), son of Giles Carter and his wife Hannah, was executed the 22d day of July, 1736, and probated at a court held at

* John Pleasants was elected to the House of Burgesses 1692-3, and upon refusing to take the oath, Captain William Randolph was elected in his stead. When Colonel William Randolph's will was presented for probate November 16th, 1742, the witnesses proving the document were William Mayo, John Scruggs and Theodrick Carter.

Varina, the first Monday in April, 1737, being recorded in Henrico County. The witnesses to the will were Thomas Watkins, John Spear and Will W. Loatham. The will names his wife Elizabeth, who was made executrix of the estate and survived her husband about ten years; son Theodrick (Second), to whom was devised a small plantation of two hundred and eighteen acres; son John, to whom was willed the land on Round Hill branch and Chicahominy Swamp bought from John Pleasants; daughter Mary. Under the will a few slaves and the usual feather beds, rugs and other articles considered necessary in colonial households were distributed. His son John received his gun and "great chest."

The St. Peter's Parish register records the birth of another daughter a few weeks after the execution of the will, and before it was probated, as follows: "Elizabeth, daughter of Theodrick and Elizabeth Carter, born August 22d, baptized September 26th, 1736."

The will of Elizabeth Carter, widow of Theodrick Carter (First), was executed July 8th, 1747, and probated before the Henrico court held the first Monday in December, 1751. The witnesses to the will were Hannah H. Morgan, Theodrick Carter (Second) and Mark Clarke. By a comparison with that of her husband, Elizabeth's will shows in addition the names of the daughters, including Mary, who was probably not married when her father's will was prepared. To her oldest son Theodrick (Second) was willed the Great Bible and certain live stock. It is barely possible this Bible is still in existence, but no trace of it has yet been discovered. A considerable amount of live stock was given to each of her children, including a horse in nearly every instance, and the remaining estate was then devised to her son John Carter, who was appointed sole executor. The daughters' names were Anne, Susannah, Martha, Mary, and Elizabeth. A legacy, a mare foal or filly, was left by Elizabeth Carter to her "grandson Cuthburd Webb," but whether Webb was part of his Christian name is not known. A family named Webb owned the plantation adjoining that of Theodrick Carter (First).

As the two brothers, Theodrick (Second) and John, duplicated the names of their sons to such an extent as to cause confusion, John and his descendants will not be considered until after the direct line of descent has been carried through to the present generation represented by General William H. Carter, and this plan is followed with reference to all collateral branches concerning which any information has been secured. A constant procession of Theodrick Carters occurred in the generation now to be considered, there being no less than seven so far traced, with the records of several families yet undiscovered. Under these circumstances those bearing the name in the direct line to General William H. Carter have been designated Theodrick (First), Theodrick (Second), Theodrick (Third), and Theodrick (Fourth).

The will of Theodrick Carter (Second), son of Theodrick (First) and Elizabeth Carter, was executed the 7th day of December, 1777, and was probated before the court held for Prince Edward County January 19th, 1778. The witnesses to the will were Agnes Watkins, William Waddill and Elizabeth Clarke. The executors named were his son Waddill Carter and his friends Nathaniel Venable (a member of the Virginia Assembly 1766-68) and Francis Watkins, who was Clerk of Prince Edward County at that time. The will names his wife Anne; daughter Susannah, wife of —— Stubblefield; son John; son Theodrick (Third); son William; son Richard; daughter Anne Waddill, wife of —— Thompson; son Waddill; daughter Molley; daughter Salley, and son Samuel.

The will devised some of the lands to Waddill Carter and the balance, including the home plantation, to Samuel Carter. Susannah Stubblefield and three of the sons, John, Theodrick and William Carter, received each a nominal legacy, the slaves and other property being distributed amongst the other sons and daughters. The legacies of the unmarried daughters are of special interest as, in addition to two slaves and the usual live stock, feather bed and furniture to each, they were given Horses, Saddles and Bridles, which, more than a century later, was unwittingly adopted as the title of a book of which the writer is the author and which is the standard textbook for instruction in those subjects at West Point and in the regular army.

Although the marriage record has not been found, corroborative evidence exists to make it quite certain that the wife of Theodrick Carter (Second) was Anne Waddill, who, according to St. Peter's Parish register, was baptized January 24th, 1713. The St. Peter's Parish register also shows that John Carter, son of Theodrick (Second) and Anne Carter, was born August 26th and baptized October 30th, 1737.

There is a record, at Houston, the county seat of Halifax County, of the sale of a tract of 183½ acres of land on Dan River, by Theodrick Carter (Second) of Prince Edward County, to his son John Carter of Halifax County, Virginia.

The will of John Carter, son of Theodrick Carter (Second) and his wife Anne, was executed June 18th, 1781, and probated before the court held for Halifax County, Virginia, September 20th, 1781. The witnesses to his will were Benjamin Hobson, David Bates, Noel Waddill, Theodrick Carter (Third), and Charles Carter, a son of Theodrick (Third). The executors named were his wife Mary Carter, Captain James Turner, William Boyd and John Carter's brothers Richard and Theodrick Carter (Third). The will named his wife Mary; daughters Anne Waddill, Elizabeth, Mary, Judith, Salley; sons Richard, Theodrick (Fourth), Robert, James and Francis.

The appearance on the will of John Carter's brothers Richard and Theodrick (Third) as executors serves, with other evidence, to definitely fix the relationship of father and son between Theodrick Carter (Second) and John Carter of Halifax County and to differentiate that John Carter from a considerable number in Virginia bearing the same name.

The will devised to his eldest daughter Anne Waddill, who had married a Waddill, a nominal legacy. To the unmarried daughters were bequeathed slaves and the usual feather beds and furniture, only one daughter, Salley, receiving her share in gold. The three oldest sons, Richard, Theodrick (Fourth) and Robert, all minors when the will was executed, received jointly a plantation containing four hundred and fifty acres; James received the home plantation, his mother to have it, with the slaves necessary to run it "during her widowhood." Francis, the youngest, received two hundred and ninety acres and provision was made that in case either James or Francis died before coming of age the deceased brother's share should go to the other, and upon the youngest becoming of age all the slaves then on the home plantation, except those given to the daughters, should be divided.

As previously stated, the will of John Carter, of Halifax County, amongst other provisions, devised to his three sons, Richard, Robert and Theodrick, four hundred and fifty acres of land purchased from George Ridley. The records of Halifax County, Virginia, show that Robert Carter sold his share of the land to George Marable.

The court records of Halifax County show that Robert Carter was married to Unity Cook, by William P. Martin, November 1st, 1792.

The last business transaction recorded by Robert Carter, in Halifax County, Virginia, prior to his removal to Tennessee, was the sale of two negroes to William Ferrell on June 19th, 1801. This closes the record, in direct line, of the branch of the family herein traced, in Virginia, as Robert Carter moved with his family to Tennessee about 1805, there being, at that time, six children, Sarah Venable, Henry Cook, John Blackgrove, Robert Michaux, Polly and Samuel Jefferson Carter, all of whom, according to the family Bible, were born in Halifax County, Virginia. Another son, Alexander Cunningham Carter, was born in Tennessee. Two other children, Mary and Nancy, did not survive infancy.

There was a considerable migration of Virginians to the new lands to the west and south, and besides Robert Carter and his family, his brothers Richard, James and Francis Watkins Carter, their sister Anne Waddill and Robert's brother-in-law, Henry Cook, left Halifax County with their families and went to seek homes in Tennessee and to the south. Robert and Francis Carter and Henry Cook settled at Franklin, Williamson County, Tennessee. Richard and James Carter and their sister Anne Waddill went to Alabama, as did their kinsmen John and Michaux Cunningham.

Robert Carter continued to reside at Franklin, Tennessee, until his death, September 9th, 1839, in his 69th year. His will was burned while in the possession of one of his grandchildren, at Nashville, Tennessee. A list of personal property, in his possession at his death, is recorded at Franklin, Williamson County, Tennessee.

Samuel Jefferson Carter, son of Robert and Unity Cook Carter, was born in Halifax County, Virginia, January 3d, 1803, and died suddenly at Carter's Landing, West Tennessee, March 31st, 1873, leaving no will. He married, as shown by the family Bible, first Eliza Staggs, and had three children: Watson M., Jordan B., and Eliza S. Samuel Jefferson Carter married second Anne Vaulx, and had fourteen children: Warren, Hays, Watkins Leigh, Charles Vaulx, Samuel J., Laura O., Irene M., Samuel Jefferson, William Giles Harding, Anne Catharine, Frank Cook, Ella Watson, Vaulx, Mary Hays.

Samuel Jefferson Carter resided with his family in Davidson County, near Nashville, Tennessee, prior to 1861, and in Nashville during the Civil War. At the time of his death he was residing on his farm in West Tennessee, near Carter's Landing, on the Mississippi River.

William Giles Harding Carter, son of Samuel Jefferson and Anne Vaulx Carter, at present the oldest living representative, in the direct line, bearing the name of Carter, was born near Nashville, Tennessee, November 19th, 1851.

William Giles Harding Carter was married, October 27th, 1880, at San Francisco, California, to Ida Dawley. Two sons have been born of this marriage, William Vaulx Carter (who was graduated from West Point in 1904 and appointed a lieutenant in the Sixth United States Cavalry, his father's old regiment), and Leigh Hays Carter, who, while a student at the University of Illinois, was accidentally killed by an electric shock in one of the University buildings, August 27th, 1907.

Of the eleven sons of Samuel Jefferson Carter, the first eight are deceased without male issue. General William H. Carter has one son, William Vault Carter, and Frank Cook Carter has one son, William Dawley Carter. These two young men, William Vault Carter and William Dawley Carter, are all of their generation bearing the name of Carter, in the direct line traced in this memoir.

By means of the records of Henrico County, Virginia, the county seat of which is Richmond; the records of Prince Edward County, Virginia, the county seat of which is Farmville; the records of Halifax County, Virginia, the county seat of which is Houston; parish registers and family records, the line of descent is traced from Giles and Hannah Carter; to Theodrick (First) and Elizabeth Carter; to Theodrick (Second) and Anne Carter; to John and Mary Carter; to Robert and Unity Cook Carter; to Samuel Jefferson and Anne Vault Carter; to General William Giles Harding and Ida Dawley Carter.

The following wills, together with various public records, have served to establish the direct line of family descent, from Giles Carter (First), born in 1634, to Robert Carter, born in Halifax County, Virginia, December 22d, 1770, who died at Franklin, Williamson County, Tennessee, September 9th, 1839:

I give and bequeath unto my son Samuel Carter the remainder of the lands and plantation whereon I now live and the following negros, Moll and her child Neptune, also all and residue of my estate not hereinbefore particularly mentioned of what kind or nature soever, except two-thirds of my pewter and the two negroes named Jack and Sarah, these two negroes Jack and Sarah I leave to my two daughters Molley and Salley for their support till they marry or die and then my son Samuel, and desire that my executors hereafter named may devide my pewter into three equal parts and allot to my son Samuel and daughters Molley and Salley each and equal part thereof, the estate herein willed to my son Samuel I give to him and his heirs forever, and it is my will that so long as my daughters Molley and Salley live single that they have the free use and liberty of their chamber in my dwelling house without the denial or interruption of my son Samuel.

It is my further will that should my said son Samuel depart this life without leaving issue, in that case the lands herein willed to him and every part of my estate bequeathed him, I give and bequeath unto my said two daughters Molley and Sally to be equally divided between them by my executors hereafter named unless my said two daughters should agree on a division themselves, which estate I bequeath to them and their heirs forever, (should it so happen my son Samuel) It is my will that all the negroes I'm possessed of be continued on my plantation the next year to make a crop.

Lastly I do constitute and appoint my son Waddill Carter and friends Nathaniel Venable and Francis Watkins Executors of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking and declaring void all other wills by me heretofore made.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this seventh day of December in the year of Christ one thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven.

COLLATERAL LINEAGE.

As has been previously stated, it is a matter of record that Giles Carter, the first of that name to come from Gloucestershire to America, sailed from Bristol, England, on the Supply and arrived at Berkeley Hundred, Virginia, January 29th, 1621 (O. S.), or February 8th of the current calendar, and that he returned to England.

The next Giles Carter found in Virginia, whose descendants this memoir concerns, was born in 1634 and at the time of Bacon's Rebellion, 1676, was living with his wife and children at Turkey Island, Virginia, and later took up land near the White Oak Swamp in Henrico County. This county embraced the second English settlement in America, Henricopolis, established by Sir Thomas Dale with 150 settlers in 1611. All that remains of the early records of the then extensive County of Henrico are preserved at Richmond, and amongst these were found the wills of Colonel James Crewe, that of Giles Carter and those of many of his descendants.

The wills of Giles Carter of Henrico; of his son Theodrick (First) of Henrico; of his grandson Theodrick (Second) of Prince Edward, and of his great grandson John of Halifax are preserved in the records at the several county seats and serve to positively establish the direct line of descent down to the fifth generation represented by Robert Carter, who with his wife, Unity Cook Carter, and their children, moved from Halifax County, Virginia, to Williamson County, Tennessee, in 1805. Family Bibles and other records complete the identification of the direct descendants to the present generation.

The records of collateral branches have not been completed, but in the search for records of the direct line numerous wills and documents have been examined and noted for the use of other descendants who may wish to trace a particular branch of this family.

The deposition and will of Giles Carter, previously cited, together with a deed recorded by Theodrick Carter (First), show that Giles was born in 1634 and died between December 14th, 1699, and March 2d, 1701.

In 1687, Thomas Cocke conveyed to Stephen Cocke 200 acres of land, "one part of which was part of ye tract or dividend of land at Malvern Hills," which included the mill property. In 1701, Stephen Cocke conveyed 56 acres, on which the mill stood, to John Pleasants. The witnesses to this deed were James Cocke, Theodrick Carter (First) and Benj. Hatcher. This, in connection with the will of Colonel James Crewe, and certain land transactions with John Pleasants previously cited, shows that Theodrick was of age when his father's will was executed in 1699. He lived until some time between July, 1736, and April, 1737, as shown by his own will.*

The will of Giles Carter, Jr., only brother of Theodrick Carter (First), has not been discovered, but his father's will showed that he was under eighteen years of age in 1699.

Giles Carter, son of Giles and Hannah Carter, recorded a deed, July 27th, 1711, of a parcel of land which Giles Carter, Sr., purchased from William Cocks, April 5th, 1685, the land being located in Henrico County, Virginia.

Among the patents to new land recorded in Henrico County, Virginia, in 1724, and 1725, is the following grant to Giles Carter: "Beginning at a corner black oak of Mr. James Powell Cocks, standing on the west side of a small path and in Machames line parting the said Cocks and John Cocks, thence to the said James Powell Cocks line south one hundred and sixteen poles to a corner pine, thence west eighty poles to a corner ash standing on the east side of Deep Run, etc."

* "Malvern Hills" probably derived its name from the range of hills about thirty miles north of Bristol which separates Gloucestershire from Hereford and Worcestershire, England.

The following abstract from the records of Henrico Parish shows that Giles Carter was still living in 1735 in the same locality :

“ In obedience to an order of the Vestry of this parish, and according to the directions of an act of Assembly entitled an act for settling the titles and bounds of land and for preventing unlawful shooting and ranging thereupon; We the subscribers have gone in procession of the General Lands within our precinct as by order dated December ye 6, 1735, with the freeholders, followeth, viz :

Theodrick Carter, his land processioned.

Gerrard Ellyson, “ “ “

Robert Ferris, “ “ “

William Ferris, “ “ “

* * * * *

“ Edward Mosby refuses to procession part of the land of Thomas Epps processioned in the precinct; the lines between John Cocke and Giles Carter that is in the county.

“ Given under our hands ye last day of March, 1736.

Test: JOHN COCKE,
GILES CARTER,
GERRARD ELLYSON.”

Among the detailed reports of the processioning appears:

“ The lines between John Cocke and William Passons both agreed in the presence of Giles Carter and Thos. Jolley. The line between John Cocke and Joseph Woodson processioned. The line between Cols. Harrison and William Lewis, and Thomas Watkins and Thomas Binford and Edward Mosely, processioned and agreed in presence of James Powel Cocke, John Cocke, Giles Carter, John Owin.”

It was the lawful custom to have the boundaries of all land patents examined every fourth year by a commission appointed to “ procession ” the land in each precinct.

At the next processioning of land, four years later, pursuant to an order of the vestry, dated July 21st, 1739, John Carter, a son of Theodrick Carter (First), and nephew of Giles Carter (Second), served as a member of the board for the precinct and the report appears in the parish vestry records.

At the processioning of August 4th, 1747, one of John Carter's sons served with Samuel Bugg and Gerrard Ellyson, but in 1755, 1759, 1767 and 1771 John Carter resumed service as one of the processioners for the precinct which is generally described as: “ From the mouth of Boar Swamp to the County line on Chickahominy Swamp, thence southward to the Long Bridge road or to the forks of Long Bridge and Bottom Bridge roads.”

The land of Theodrick Carter, processioned by John Cocke, Giles Carter (Second), and Gerrard Ellyson, shown in their report of “ye last day of March, 1736,” appears to be the land on the south side of Chickahominy Swamp, known as the “Round Hills” place, obtained by Theodrick Carter (First) from John Pleasants through an exchange for land received by Theodrick (First) from his father, Giles Carter, Sr. The Round Hills property was left by Theodrick Carter (First), in his will, to his son John Carter, brother of Theodrick (Second).

In the Virginia State Archives there is a petition in regard to the boundary line of Henrico and Hanover Counties under date of May 23d, 1774, as follows:

“To the Honorable the Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Burgesses:

“Your petitioners humbly show that they are deeply interested in the bounds of their lands on the Chickahominy Swamp. Therefore, we pray that if it shall be the opinion of this Honorable House, that it is reasonable that the said boundaries shall be ascertained by commissioners, that such commissioners may be chosen from Chesterfield, King William or some distant county, who are in no way in affinity or connected with any of the Proprietors of Lands on the said swamp, and your petitioners in duty bound shall pray, etc.

James Cocke. Jacob Ferris. William Carter.
 John Pleasants. John Ferris. John Binford.
 Thomas Watkins. John Carter. James Eppes.’’

One of the Carter daughters had married an Eppes, and the petitioners generally had lived as neighbors through several generations.

Of the same date as the foregoing petition another was sent in with practically the same signers as before, including the Carters, and set forth, that fearing trouble if any attempt should be made to introduce new methods of laying off boundaries: “That your petitioners apprehend that good and salutary law now subsists in this colony for ascertaining the bounds of every person’s land by going round the same by way of procession once in four years.’’

The will of John Carter, son of Theodrick (First) and brother of Theodrick (Second), executed December 1st, 1785, and probated before Henrico court in Richmond January 2d, 1786, names his son Theodrick, to whom a nominal legacy is made; son John, Jr., to whom is willed the land on White Oak Swamp, on which John, Jr., was then living, containing two hundred acres; daughter Frances Walton, to whom a nominal legacy is provided. A deed, dated April 5th, 1773, by John Carter, is recorded in Henrico County in which one negro slave is given to each of his grandchildren John Carter Walton, Mary Walton and Elizabeth Walton, children of his daughter Frances Walton of Charlotte County. To his son William were given all the remaining lands joining that already owned by William and bounded by other land deeded to William's brother Jacob; son Sherwood; son Jacob, to whom was given "one negro fellow named Giles," which indicated that the old Carter name of "Giles" was perpetuated amongst the slaves; granddaughter Betsy Gannaway Carter (daughter of Jacob and Mary Carter) to whom three negroes were willed; granddaughter Betsy Carter (daughter of John and Anne Carter), to whom was given one negro boy. Four of the sons, John, William, Sherwood and Jacob Carter, were appointed executors, and were directed to sell two negroes to pay any debts, the balance of the slaves being distributed under the will.

The wills of John Carter's sons, John, Jr., and Sherwood, are recorded in Henrico County. Those of Theodrick, William and Jacob have not been found. These five brothers were grandsons of Theodrick Carter (First) and his wife Elizabeth.

The will of John Carter, of Henrico County, son of John and Elizabeth Carter and grandson of Theod-rick Carter (First), was executed the 6th of December, 1799, and probated the 1st of September, 1800. The witnesses were Theodrick Carter, Wm. Garthright and James Binford. The executors were his brother Jacob Carter and Jacob's son John. The will mentions his wife Anne, whose will is also of record; his daughter Betsy, who married Mr. Eppes; his daughter Polly P. Carter; his wife's sister Sarah Carter, the widow of one of his kinsmen. The will of Anne Carter appoints John Carter of New Kent County sole executor. To her grandson, Temple Eppes, she gave a "grey horse; and also fifty dollars to be expended on him in schooling." To her daughter Polly P. Carter, she gave "my sorrel mare and colt, one cow and calf, one pair of the largest red steers, which are unbroke to the yoke, three first choice pair sheets, one first choice pair white counterpins, one pair diamonded yard counterpins, one pair new flannel blankets, my riding chair and harness, all my window curtains, and fifty dollars in cash to repair the chair." The will of Anne Carter was executed the 7th of April, 1807, the witnesses being Jacob Carter, Moses Carter, Polley Austin and Jacob Ferris. There is no mention of Moses Carter in any of the recorded wills. He was probably a son of Jacob Carter whose will has not been found.

The will of Sherwood Carter of Henrico County, son of John and Elizabeth Carter and grandson of Theodrick Carter (First), was executed the 22d of June, 1797, and probated the 4th of September, 1797. The witnesses were John Carter, William Fussel and Thomas Epperson. The executors were his brother Jacob Carter and his (Sherwood's) son William. The will mentions his wife Frances, whose will is also of record; son Joseph; son William; daughter Betsey, who married Mr. Brackett; son Theodrick; son Samuel; son John. The will of Frances, widow of Sherwood Carter, executed the 20th of October, 1808, mentions a grandson Robert, son of William Carter, and a granddaughter Frances Brackett, daughter of Betsey Brackett.

There is of record a will by Theodrick Carter of Henrico County, executed the 9th of December, 1809, which mentions his wife Ann; son Theodrick B.; daughter Kitty; daughter Nancy. The testator is believed to have been the son of Sherwood Carter. This is the only will in the family so far discovered which makes a special legacy of books; to his son Theodrick B. Carter he gave, "all my books and all the silver and plate about my house of all descriptions."

There is a will of record in Henrico County, executed October 31st, 1796, by Benjamin Carter, and witnessed by John Carter, Robert Binford and Nathaniel Maynard, in which it is provided that: "whereas my son Theodrick Carter has had his part of my horses, I desire he may not share in them;" he participated in the residue of the estate which was divided between the four children Theodrick Carter, Betsy Carter, Nancy Carter and Frankey Carter.

The sons of Giles Carter were Theodrick (First) and Giles, Jr.; Theodrick (First) had only two sons, Theodrick (Second) and John, and of all their sons, named in their wills, there is no mention of a Benjamin. But Benjamin named his only son Theodrick and lived in the same locality from whence have sprung all the family of Carters perpetuating that name, and his will was witnessed by a Carter and a Binford. His generation would correspond to that following Giles Carter (Second), and it is believed that Benjamin Carter was one of the sons of Giles Carter (Second), of whose will no record has yet been found, and that Giles Carter (Third) was another son.

The Henrico County, Virginia, records contain many references to the Carters, particularly the descendants of John Carter, son of Theodrick Carter (First) and grandson of Giles Carter (First). From these entries the following extracts were made:

September 28th, 1772, there is a record, subsequently acknowledged in court at the April term, 1773, in which Giles Carter of Henrico County sold to Drury Wood one negro slave named Aaron and two horses, "The one a large gray horse with a hanging mane and switch tail, branded on the near buttock with two dots and on the near shoulder with one dot," etc.

April 8th, 1784, there is an entry that: "Giles Carter this day produced in open court a commission under the hand and seal of his Excellency Benjamin Harrison, Esq., Governor or Chief Magistrate of the commonwealth, appointing him an Inspector of tobacco at Rocketts warehouse in this County, and thereupon the oath of office was administered unto him, who also with Martin Hawkins and John Smith, his security, entered into and acknowledged their bond in the penalty of one thousand pounds payable and conditioned as the law directs."

The two foregoing records relate to Giles Carter (Third), of Henrico County.

February 2d, 1795, Thomas Binford petitioned to turn the road leading from Bottoms Bridge to Woodson's Ferry. Jacob Carter one of three ordered to view the proposed route "and make report of the conveniences and inconveniences of the said intended road."

October 19th, 1818, Frances Carter sold to Theodrick Carter, Jr., 109 acres of land for a nominal sum; witnesses to the deed John Carter, Sr., and Joseph Carter. The same day she recorded a similar deed for 107 acres to John Carter, Jr.; witnesses to the deed, Theodrick Carter and Joseph Carter. Under the same date she recorded a deed for 192 acres, bounded by the land of Lindsay, Garthright, Goode, Childres and Holison, in favor of Samuel Carter; witnesses John Carter and Joseph Carter.

November 5th, 1821, letters of administration on estate of Martha Carter granted to Samuel S. Carter.

The foregoing facts concerning the descendants of John, the son of Theodrick Carter (First), and of Giles Carter (Second), the brother of Theodrick Carter (First), were examined into partly for the purpose of determining when the migration of Carters from Henrico began and to what portion of the family it was confined. As a result of this investigation it appears certain that the Carters of this family remaining in Henrico were the descendants of Giles Carter (Second) and John Carter, the former a younger brother of Theodrick (First) and the latter a son of Theodrick (First). It is necessary to bear in mind that Giles Carter, who was born in 1634, had only two sons, Theodrick (First) and Giles, Jr. Theodrick (First) had only two sons, Theodrick (Second) and John. Theodrick Carter (Second) left Henrico and lived, at the date of the execution of his will, in Prince Edward County.

The will of Elizabeth, widow of Theodrick Carter (First), which was dated July 8th, 1747, and probated in December, 1751, appointed her second son, John, as executor and principal legatee. It is probable that her elder son, Theodrick (Second), to whom was devised the family Bible, was no longer residing in Henrico when the will was executed.

The efforts to definitely determine the date of movement of Theodrick Carter (Second), and other members of the family, from Henrico have been unsuccessful. The Henrico Parish records show that Rev. David Mossom was engaged to hold services there at regular intervals until about 1735. He was regularly in charge of St. Peter's Parish and recorded some of the births of Henrico County Carters in that parish.

St. Peter's Parish, in which the birth of John Carter, son of Theodrick (Second) and Anne Carter, August 26th, 1737, is recorded, was in New Kent County, south of the York and Pamunkey rivers. New Kent County was cut off from the upper part of York County in 1654. St. Peter's Parish church was only a few miles from the "White House," and the minister, Rev. David Mossom, performed the ceremony when George Washington was married to Martha Custis. Rev. David Mossom was followed in St. Peter's Parish by Rev. James Semple, and he was followed by Rev. Benjamin Blackgrove. A son of Robert and grandson of John Carter was named John Blackgrove Carter. The name of Blackgrove has not been found elsewhere, and John is believed to have been named after this minister, whose name was sometimes spelled Blagrove.

The record of the birth of John Carter, eldest son of Theodrick Carter (Second) and his wife Anne, in the St. Peter's Parish register, together with the absence of the records of the births of numerous younger children, indicates that Theodrick moved to St. Patrick's Parish, Prince Edward County, where his will was made, after the birth of his son John. The rapidity with which new counties were formed south of the James indicates a widespread migration during the period under consideration.

St. Patrick's Parish, Prince Edward County, where Theodrick Carter (Second), father of John of Halifax, lived when his will was made, was not established until June, 1755. In 1755 the parish was made to conform to the boundaries of Prince Edward County, which was taken from Amelia County in 1754. Lunenburg County was formed in 1746 from Brunswick County and is not far distant from Prince Edward County. Halifax County was formed from Lunenburg County in 1752.

The sons of Theodrick Carter (Second) of Prince Edward County, were John, Theodrick (Third), William, Richard, Waddill and Samuel. The wills of John and Theodrick (Third) are recorded in Halifax County. Certain details concerning Richard's orphan children, recorded in Halifax County, indicate that he left no will.

It appears from the records of Prince Edward County wills that Waddill, son of Theodrick Carter (Second), married Mildred Wade and remained in the county until his death, as did Samuel, who received the home plantation by the will of his father, Theodrick Carter (Second). There is no record of the will of William in Prince Edward County. There is a record, in the adjoining County of Lunenburg, of the marriage of one William Carter and Mary Scott which would correspond to that generation.

The will of Waddill Carter is recorded in Prince Edward County. It was executed April 6th, 1782, and probated at the following July session of the county court. The witnesses were Ro. Lawson, John Morton, Tho. Charlton and Abraham Venable. The executors were his brother Samuel Carter, his father-in-law James Wade and "my good friend Francis Watkins." The will mentioned his wife Mildred (Wade) Carter, his sons James, Theodrick and John, all three under age when the will was executed. There were two or more young daughters, but their names were not given.

There are several acts of the general assembly of Virginia which establish the presence of Samuel Carter in Prince Edward County and vicinity in 1795 and in 1806. The first is an act to establish a town on the land of Alexander Le Grand, in the County of Prince Edward, which was passed December 14, 1795:

"Be it enacted by the general assembly; That twenty-five acres of land, the property of Alexander Le Grand, in the county of Prince Edward, shall, and they are hereby vested in John Purnell, James Morton, James Allen, Josiah Le Grand, Baker Le Grand, Samuel Carter, Charles Allen, sen., and Ryland Randolph, gentlemen, trustees, to be by them, or a majority of them, laid off into town lots of half an acre each, with convenient streets, and establish a town, by the name of Germantown.”

Another act of the Virginia assembly, passed February 1, 1806, appointed commissioners to view the way for a navigable canal from Roanoke to Appomatox:

“Whereas it is represented to be practicable to cut a navigable canal from the waters of Roanoke to the head of Buffalo creek, and to connect the same by the said creek with the river Appomatox: Be it therefore enacted, that Creed Taylor, Isaac H. Coles, Joseph Wyatt, Richard K. Randolph, Samuel Carter, Charles Scott and William B. Banks, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners, the duty of whom, or any three of them, it shall be, to examine the route most convenient for such a communication, and report thereupon their opinion, to the next assembly.”

Samuel Carter was a veteran of the Revolution, having served in the Virginia Line of the Continentals, and lived to a ripe old age. His will was executed December 17th, 1829, and probated May 18th, 1830.

The witnesses were J. Michaux, J. W. Franklin, R. Booker and James Madison. The executors were his sons William M. and Edward A. Carter, and his son-in-law Doctor John P. Mittauer, whose wife was Margaret E. Carter.

The will of Theodrick Carter (Third) of Halifax County, Virginia, son of Theodrick Carter (Second) of Prince Edward County, was executed July 13th, 1805. The executors appointed were his son Alexander Carter, and sons-in-law Richard E. Bennett and Mathew Cabaniss. The will mentions his sons Charles, Samuel, William, Alexander, Nathaniel, Thomas and Jessee; his daughters Elizabeth, wife of ——— Richardson; Ann, wife of Richard Bennett; Susannah, wife of Mathew Cabaniss.*

The family Bible shows two other sons of Theodrick Carter (Third): one, Townes, born April 28th, 1767, by his first wife, and John, born July 26th, 1783, by his second wife.

Amongst the old records of Lunenburg County,

* Henri Cabaniss, a Huguenot refugee who had spent some time in England, came to Virginia in 1700 and died in 1725. He was married when he arrived. He had three sons, Mathew, Henri and George. Mathew married Hannah Clay, daughter of Thomas Clay, and had issue: Mathew, William, John, George and Charles. Mathew moved to Halifax County and married Susannah Carter, daughter of Theodrick and Judith Cunningham Carter. Mathew's brother George married a daughter of Henry Harrison of Sussex, who was a son of Benjamin Harrison of Berkeley.

which have escaped destruction, are a few marriage records, one of which is the marriage bond of Theodrick Carter and Molly Eelbank, dated November 10th, 1763. It is probable that he was the son of John and Elizabeth Carter of Henrico, but he might have been their grandson. It is certain that he was not the son of Theodrick Carter (Second) of Prince Edward County of the same generation, for his son Theodrick (Third) married, first, Miss Townes, and, second, Judith Cunningham, and lived in Halifax County, where his will is recorded, and where numerous descendants have continued to the present generation.

While quite incomplete the foregoing data may be useful in identifying some of the families descended from Giles and Hannah Carter which became gradually dispersed to numerous Virginia counties and thence, at an early period, to the new states from Virginia to the Gulf and westward to the Rio Grande.

THE BERKELEY HUNDRED COLONY.

During the month of September, 1620, two ships were fitted out in English ports, under charters to convey colonists to the extensive domain then controlled by the Virginia Company. The first to get under way was the Mayflower, which hoisted anchor in Plymouth harbor and went to sea in a fair-sized gale on September 6th, 1620. It was designed by the council of the Virginia Company to have the Puritan colonists land in the vicinity of the Delaware Capes, but through intrigue or miscalculation of the master, the Mayflower, after a tempestuous voyage, first sighted land at Cape Cod and eventually dropped anchor in a bay previously visited and named by John Smith—"Plymouth."

Whether it was by accident or design that the little band of Puritans disembarked on the bleak coast of New England, none can now view the incident as other than the work of Providence. The fierce gales of the Atlantic had told heavily upon the strength and vitality of all on board the ship, and before shelter could be prepared and the needful stores brought ashore, the grim harvester had sadly depleted the ranks of the iron-hearted men and women engaged in establishing the initial plant of a civilization possessed of an intense individuality which will characterize it through all history.

Twelve days after the sailing of the Mayflower, Thomas Parker, Mayor of Bristol, England, cleared the ship Supply, destined for Berkeley Hundred on the James River. The gale which had carried the Mayflower well to sea before its first tack had now died away and the Supply was destined to linger in the Avon and Severn from the 18th of September until the 25th awaiting a favorable breeze. The voyage of the Mayflower across the Atlantic will go down the ages to typify the flight of a band of men and women who dared all for conscience' sake and won. The Supply sailed under different auspices, more akin to those which have since characterized the passage of untold fleets, conveying millions upon millions to America, the land of hope and opportunity.

Captain Newport's historic fleet had dropped anchor off Jamestown Island a dozen years before the sailing of the Supply, yet all the efforts of the Virginia Company had resulted in locating only a few hundred colonists in the immense area then passing under the title of Virginia. But the seed had been planted and, cost what it might, there was determination that not a foot should be receded to the grasping Spanish gold seekers hovering about the coasts, and whose daring explorers had already penetrated from the land of the Aztec to New Mexico, Colorado and the Great Plains, and had learned that the western ocean lay several thousand miles from the Virginia coast.

In 1618 a partnership, having for its object the establishment of a plantation in Virginia, had been entered into by Sir William Throckmorton, Richard Berkeley, George Thorpe and John Smyth, all of Gloucestershire, and John Woodleeffe. Upon the advice of Sir Edwin Sands an interest was reserved for Sir John Yeardley, then serving in Virginia as governor of the colony, but this was subsequently surrendered by Yeardley.

During the following year, 1619, a ship, the Margaret of Bristol (forty-seven tons), was sent out with thirty-two colonists under John Woodleeffe, with instructions to establish the town of Berkeley and the plantation of Berkeley Hundred on the James River. John Woodleeffe sailed on the Margaret September 4th, 1619, in charge of the expedition, and arrived in the James December 10th of the same year. George Thorpe followed on the Merchant of London during March, 1620.

Ferdinando Yate, Gent., who came over in the Margaret, was commissioned to keep a record of the voyage, which he prepared under date of November 30th, 1619, and which closes with this glowing tribute: "If I had the eloquence of Cesero or the skillful art of Apellese I could not pen neither paint out a better praise of the cuntry than the cuntry it selfe deserveth."

At the session of the court of the Virginia Company, of January 26th, 1619, an indenture was granted to William Tracy, Esq., of Hayles, Gloucestershire, a brother of Sir Thomas Tracy, baronet, for the establishment of a colony of five hundred persons in Virginia, and on May 7th, 1620, Sir William Throckmorton transferred his interest in the plantation of Berkeley Hundred to Tracy.

At a subsequent session of the court of the Virginia Company, on June 28th, 1620, and upon the recommendation of Governor George Yeardley as to the need of a council, George Thorpe and William Tracy were, with four others, constituted the Council of State of Virginia.

William Tracy was a cousin of Richard Berkeley. John Smyth was an Oxford graduate and the legal adviser of his friend Lord Berkeley, and both he and Sir William Throckmorton were connected with Tracy by family ties.

There are but few details known of the voyages of the many ships which sailed across the Atlantic during the first half century of settlement—if all the frail boats of thirty tons and upwards may be properly characterized as ships. Owing to the partnership agreements and the correspondence attending the assembling of the colonists from Gloucestershire who comprised the small company on the Supply, and who constituted the advance guard of the five hundred persons whom William Tracy undertook to embark in his scheme of colonization, certain records were preserved which enable a fairly correct understanding to be had of this expedition.

The Mayor of Bristol, in clearing the Supply, retained a list of those embarking, and, upon arrival of the ship in the James, Sir George Yeardley furnished a certificate with the names of those who arrived safely at Berkeley Hundred. An examination of correspondence and available county records makes it very evident that William Tracy organized the first detachment of his five hundred colonists mainly from his kinsmen and neighbors in Gloucestershire. William Tracy was descended from Sir William de Tracy, one of the four knights, who, in 1170, at the instigation of King Henry II, assassinated Thomas à Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury. The family connection, especially in Gloucestershire, was very large.

Under date of July 5th, 1620, Tracy wrote to Smyth:

“ My household will be wife, dauter & Sune, 4¹ Mayd servants & 6 men: so then for ye rest as mani or as few as yo will. Mr. Palet & Mr Gilfort must be two more of my compani, so I shall be 16 persons at lest. My meaning is all these shall be imployed in ye common bisness.”

A postscript was added:

“ I would cari 10 or 12 dogs yt would be of great youse to us—let me know if they will let us cari them.”

Delay in the date of sailing caused Tracy to grow impatient and in his next letter to Smyth he wrote: “ You have Nibli, he (Richard Berkeley) has Stoke, I have nothing but Virginia and it am I held from to live in shame and disgrace in England.” The outlook for younger sons was never more gloomy in England than during the period covered by the early emigration to the Colony of Virginia. The list of Berkeley colonists comprised many men whose social station was attested by the addition of “ Gentleman ” to their names and who engaged to remain for periods of from two to seven years in the colony. The word servant of the Virginia Company, so often used, did not imply that the person referred to was a menial.

The Supply (eighty tons), Captain Tobias Felgate, was chartered from William Ewins of Bristol, England, and was fitted out at that city for the voyage to Virginia. Owing to its restricted accommodations, and the well-known results of overcrowding such ships on long voyages at that time, a number who had prepared to sail were left behind to follow on the next ship. The fitting out of the Supply embarrassed Tracy financially, but his kinsmen came promptly to his relief. The remarkable health record on the voyage was almost wholly due to his wise forethought and able preparation.

With the colonists went books on English husbandry and the care of silk worms; a great quantity of garden seeds and "a reasonable quantity of the seeds of cotton wool." Mr. Smyth sent from his own nurseries "a great number of yonge stocks and of apple trees grafted with pippens, pearmaynes and other the best apples, which he hopeth for his own humor and affeccon sake therein you will have somewhat the more care of, as also of the bagg of abricots, damosell and other plum stones he now sendeth."

It should be remarked that thus early in the colony was recognized the necessity for diversified farming, for in the indenture granted to William Tracy and his associates is a covenant: "That they and all persons by them transported for their particular plan-tacon, shall apply themselves and their labor in a large and competent manner to the plantinge, sowinge, setting, making, working and procuringe of good and staple commodities, in and upon the lands granted unto them, as namely, corne, wine, oyle, silk gras, hempe, flax, pitch and tarre, sope ashes and potashes, iron, clapboards and other materials, and the like, and not wholly or chiefly upon tobacco.”

It does not require a vivid imagination to trace much of Virginia history from these apparently simple preparations and the bit of warning contained in the covenant forbidding the exclusive cultivation of tobacco. The introduction of the pippen has been a source of health and profit to Virginians for three centuries and has elevated “Albemarle” from a merely local county to a section famous the world over for its apples. The cotton seed needed the long summer for maturity and was carried to the south by the gradual overflow of settlers from Virginia. Tobacco, being at an early date established as a cash crop and in fact as the only currency of the colony available for exchange with England, proved the lure which slowly sapped the life of a naturally rich soil, and in the course of years turned promising plantations into “old pine fields,” many of which have not yet regained the fertility so ruthlessly drained in the mad rush for immediate profit from the colonies.

Under the Virginia Company it was the custom for the governor of the colony to give a certificate to each ship on arrival, setting forth the list of passengers and such other mention as circumstances seemed to merit. Nearly all of these certificates have disappeared, but the one concerning the arrival of the Supply on this voyage, signed by Governor George Yeardley, is still preserved. The following is a copy of the certificate which contains also the signature of John Pory, the secretary of the colony:

“ These are to certifie the Right honorable, Right Worshipfull and others of the Counsell and company for this First Southern Colony of Virginia, that there arrived at Barklay in the same country, for the account of the Society and the plantation of the said Hundred, upon the 29th of January, 1620/1 (O. S.), these fifty persons, under written visit:—

“ William Tracy, Esq.; Mary Tracy his wife; Thomas Tracy their sonne; Joyce Tracy their daughter; Frances Grevell; Elizabeth Webbe; Alice Heskins; Isabell Gifford; Arnold Oldsworth, Esq.; Robert Pawlett, divine; Thomas Kemys, gent; John Holmden, gent; Richard Ferriby; George Keene, gent; Nicholas Combe, gent; William Finche, Margaret his wife and Frances their daughter; John Gibbes; Robert Baker; John Howlett the elder; John and William Howlett, his sonnes; Walter Prosser;

Jo: Pory, Sect."

The certificate of Thomas Parker, Mayor of Bristol, gives the names of fifty-eight passengers on the Supply when cleared. There is extant some correspondence between William Tracy and John Smyth of Nibley concerning certain persons left behind on account of the crowded condition of the ship. Whether any of these were put ashore during the week the Supply lay in the Severn awaiting favorable weather is not known. If none were put ashore after the ship was cleared the loss on the voyage amounted to eight souls, a not uncommon percentage in the vessels of that period.

The Town and Hundred of Berkeley on James River—the present landing for this ancient plantation is known as Harrison's Landing—had been previously under the management of Captain Woodleffe, but the Supply brought the revocation of his appointment and the new commissions of William Tracy and George Thorpe to be governors of Berkeley Town and Hundred. Tracy also brought a letter of instruction and advice concerning Virginia affairs from Richard Berkeley and John Smyth.

An agreement was entered into by Berkeley, Thorpe, Tracy, and Smyth, dated August 27th, 1620, to the end that whenever Richard Berkeley and John Smyth in England should disagree as to matters touching the colony in Virginia, questions at issue should be submitted to Sir William Throckmorton, knight and baronet; Sir Thomas Roe, knight, and Sir Thomas Tracy, knight, brother of William Tracy, whose decision should prevail, without further argument, in order that the colonists should not suffer from the delay incident to slow and uncertain communication.

Soon after the arrival of the Supply a census was taken of all the colonists living in Virginia, and the report of March, 1621, showed that only 843 survived. The preceding twelve months had been specially disastrous to the newly arrived colonists located beside the fever infested swamps of the James.

From such evidence as now exists it appears that Tracy employed his adherents in selecting suitable locations for those to follow from Gloucestershire and that during the year many of them took up locations in the neighboring country under his control. Tracy gave every evidence to his followers that he had come to cast his fortunes with the new country for his wife, a son Thomas and daughter Joyce, and one of her young kinswomen accompanied him. Not many months after their arrival, his daughter married Captain Nathaniel Powel, a member of the council in 1621 and for a time governor of the colony, and her young kinswoman, Frances Grevell, married De la Warr. The plantations of Lady De la Warr adjoined the lands selected for the establishment of Berkeley Hundred. The colonists had encountered hardships of exceptional character, but had maintained a determination to establish themselves permanently. The fever infested sites were being gradually recognized; clearings were made, a variety of crops planted, and in fact everything was being undertaken which previous experience had suggested as necessary to make the colony self-supporting, if not profitable.

The death of Tracy proved the first blow, soon followed by the appearance of a small cloud destined, as "The Indian Question," not only to terminate Tracy's dreams of a large Gloucestershire colony, but to come down through two and a half centuries to test the courage, ability and fair-mindedness of the American people. All unknown to the colonists along the James and the estuaries of the Chesapeake, a conspiracy was being formed, having for its object the wresting of their country from the English invaders and its restoration to its aboriginal owners. On April 1st, 1622, the Indians throughout the tide water region fell upon the scattered settlers, and those who had come with Tracy, as the advance guard of his colonizing scheme, suffered grievously. Of the fifty who arrived on the Supply more than half fell by the hand of treachery. The massacre fell without discrimination on all the scattered groups, but upon none more heavily than those from Gloucestershire, and included George Thorpe, Tracy's daughter Joyce and her husband, Captain Nathaniel Powel. There was mourning in Gloucestershire, from Stow-on-the-wold to Bristol, for with the directing energy departed, the survivors of the ill-fated expedition were left to battle unaided in the wilderness of Virginia. Several gentlemen of the party, including Tracy's son Thomas, made their way back to England, Thomas Kemys remaining in charge of Berkeley Hundred. It was not long before the stream of immigration again flowed towards the weakened settlements and started them on the upward turn. From a struggling infant, Virginia gradually became self-supporting and then imperceptibly but surely passed into the column of colonies whose trade had become profitable to the mother country.

Others came to take the places of Tracy and his kinsmen and to reap the profits of their well-planned schemes. The Indian had cast the die and lost, for though the general massacre throughout the colony had been admirably planned, it had failed of its purpose and resulted only in planting in the hearts of those colonists who escaped, a desire for revenge and for an assurance of future peace. This was only to be obtained by the extinction of the aboriginal Virginian and the gradual substitution by emigration of a race become distinguished for its chivalrous gallantry, generous hospitality and inestimable services in carrying the torch of civilization far to the west and south, and in maintaining through three centuries the high ideals of government upon which other commonwealths have builded with a sense of absolute confidence and security.

THE GLOUCESTERSHIRE COLONISTS.

The thirty-five colonists who sailed from Bristol, England, in 1619, on the Margaret, Captain Tobias Felgate, and the fifty-eight who sailed from Bristol in 1620, on the Supply, Captain Tobias Felgate, were sent as the advance guard to establish the town of Berkeley and lay out the plantations of Berkeley Hundred, for the colony of five hundred to be forwarded from time to time as vessels could be procured.

The original partners in the venture were Richard Berkeley, Sir William Throckmorton, John Smyth, M. P. for Midhurst, George Thorpe and a London tradesman named John Woodleefe. Throckmorton transferred his share to William Tracy, to whom the Virginia Company had given authority to colonize five hundred persons in Virginia.

From records now available, the family connections of the partners and of some of those sailing on the Supply is disclosed. Berkeley was a cousin and Throckmorton a kinsman of Tracy, whose mother was Anne Throckmorton. Samuel Tracy, a cousin of William Tracy, had married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Smyth, and Barbara Tracy, a daughter of Sir Paul and niece of Samuel Tracy, married Richard Smyth.

At the date of early Virginia colonization the Tracy family was prominent in Gloucestershire. The Visitation of 1623 shows, in the generation under consideration, a Thomas and a William in each of the branches of the family, the Tracys of Stanwaye and the Tracys of Tudington. Sir Paul Tracy was at the head of the Stanwaye branch.

John Smyth recorded an agreement of the partners in which reference is made to William Tracy as the brother of Sir Thomas Tracy. Histories of the colonial period refer to William Tracy as the son of Sir John Tracy. Sir John Tracy of the Tudington branch had three sons, Thomas, John and William. William Tracy, who organized the expedition which sailed on the Supply, was the son of Sir John Tracy and his wife Anne Throckmorton.

On the eve of sailing, William Tracy was embarrassed with the unusual expense arising from delay and among those who hastened to his relief were his cousins, Timothy Yate and John Bridges. One of the Yate family was the husband of Margaret Berkeley, granddaughter of Sir Robert Berkeley, knight, a brother of Thomas Lord Berkeley. Henry Tracy, grandfather of William Tracy, married Elizabeth Bridges. A daughter of Edmund Crewe married John Bridges, and another descendant, Richard Crewe, married later, in 1658, Eleanor, daughter of William Laurance of Sherdington, Gloucestershire, which will be referred to in another connection later.

The court records show that on the 7th October, 1620, Richard Yate married Bridget Carter. The wife of William Carter, son of John of Lower Swell, was named Bridget, and it was probably her daughter. Yate was a kinsman of both Tracy and Berkeley.

Much evidence exists to show that the party which sailed on the Supply was made up from Gloucestershire families, many of which were akin, or connected by marriage. Amongst the items entered in the accounts incident to outfitting the ship Supply is one for transporting twenty persons who went with Tracy from Hayles to Bristol.

Among the post mortem inquisitions of Gloucestershire is one relating to the property of John Carter who, at his death, "was seized as of fee of the manor of Lower Swell, late parcel of the possessions of the Bishop of London, and sometime belonging to the dissolved monastery of Hayles; * * * all the tithes of the premises which lately belonged to the dissolved Monastery of Hayles." An examination of the document in its relation to family connections shows that Giles Carter, the son and heir of John Carter, married Elizabeth, daughter of Paul Tracy, Esq., who appears later as Sir Paul Tracy of Stanwaye, having been created a baronet in 1611. Paul was a first cousin of Thomas, John and William Tracy of Tudington.

John Carter was High Sheriff of Gloucestershire, 10 January, 1612. At the time of the organization of the expedition by William Tracy, John Carter resided at the manor of Lower Swell, being also in possession of Cold Aston, Shipton, Charleton Abbots and other estates in Overhampen, Compton and Badgworth.

The will of Gyles Carter of Badgworth, Gloucestershire, dated in 1585, appears amongst those in the Prerogative Court Canterbury wills (47 Brudenell). As John Carter died possessed of property in Badgworth and named his eldest son Gyles, it is believed that Gyles of Badgworth was his father, but the will of Gyles has not yet been examined to determine this. Some of the Badgworth estates, together with Cold Aston and the demesne lands pertaining thereto, were deeded by John Carter to Elizabeth Tracy, wife of his son Giles Carter, as part of her dower during her life.

John Carter married Mary, daughter of Robert Laurance of Shipton, and had issue: Giles m. Elizabeth Tracy; John, Jr., m. Anna Partridge; William m. Bridget ——; Anne m. Giles Broadway; Eleanor m. Humphrey Colles; Mary m. John More.

The county records show that Giles Carter, Esq., son and heir of John, was the head of the family, after the death of his father in 1627. During the "Great Rebellion" Giles Carter was sequestered and compounded for £968 17s. A handsome monument was erected to the memory of Giles Carter in the parish church of Cold Aston. In the parish church of Longney on the banks of the Severn, there is also a tablet containing an inscription in memory of the family of Giles and Elizabeth Carter.

In the old parish church of Seavenhampton, which was built prior to 1447: "There are divers inscriptions in the body of the church, for the family of Carters of Charleton Abbotts."

Among those who accompanied Tracy to Virginia on the Supply appear the names of Giles Carter and Giles Broadway. The Visitation of Gloucestershire, 1623, shows the marriage of Giles Carter and Elizabeth Tracy, daughter of Paul Tracy; that of Giles Broadway and Anne Carter, a sister of Giles Carter; and the existence of Alexander Broadway, who was also named among those with Tracy. Giles and Anne Carter Broadway had a son named Giles Broadway. As Giles Broadway, Sr., died in England 14th March, 1657, it was probably his son Giles who went to Virginia on the Supply, and was killed by the Indians.

Among the names of Tracy's party are Arthur and Thomas Kemys, Gent. The Visitation of Gloucestershire, 1623, shows both of these names. One of William Tracy's ancestors married Margery Paunceforte and Arthur Kemys married Anne Paunceforte, a niece of Margery.

In the inquisition taken at Cirencester, in relation to property left by William Crewe, Gent., who died at Aldersleighe 3d October 12 Charles (1635), the names of Thomas Gibbs and Edmund Ferribie are found among the jurors; two members of Tracy's expedition bore these family names. Among other neighboring families were Oldsworth and Strange, both of which were represented in the list of colonists with Tracy on the Supply.

John Smyth of Nibley preserved a list of colonists on the Supply who escaped the massacre and of those who returned to England, among the latter being Giles Carter and William Tracy's young son Thomas.

It has been shown that John Bridges, William Tracy's cousin, married a daughter of Edmund Crewe, and that a descendant of this marriage, Richard Bridges, married, in 1658, Eleanor Laurance, daughter of William Laurance of Sherdington, Gloucestershire. William Laurance was the son of Robert Laurance of Shipton and Eleanor Stratford, his second wife. Mary Laurance, wife of John Carter of Lower Swell and mother of Giles Carter, who married Elizabeth Tracy, was a daughter of Robert Laurance by his first wife, and therefore a half sister to William Laurance, who is mentioned with his brother Robert in the inquisition on John Carter's estate.

The Crewe family was widely dispersed in Gloucestershire and that they were closely connected with the Carter family appears quite certain from various records. The will of Francis Crewe, brother of Colonel James Crewe of Virginia, and father of Mathew Crewe, is filed at Bristol under date of 1673. Mathew Crewe was appointed by Colonel James Crewe as his administrator. The parish registers show that Mathew Crewe, of Wooten-under-Edge, married Esther Trotman of Cam 30 December, 1672. The Trotmans of Cam descended from a marriage between Nicholas Trotman, who died in 1577, and Cecill Carter, daughter of Giles Carter.

It is shown elsewhere in this memoir that when Colonel James Crewe was tried by court-martial at Green Spring and sentenced to be hung for participation in Bacon's Rebellion, he made generous bequests to Giles and Hannah Carter and their children, then living at Turkey Island, Virginia, and asked that his loving friend Giles Carter command his servants and live in his house, the executor appointed by Crewe, his cousin Matthew Crewe, being then in England. Tobacco was the currency of the colony and the generous bequests of Colonel James Crewe to Giles Carter and his family, including 10,000 pounds of tobacco to each of Giles Carter's daughters, would hardly have been made except to kinsmen.

It has not been discovered who were the parents of Giles Carter who was born in 1634 and was with Colonel James Crewe in Virginia just prior to his trial by court-martial. None of the lists of passengers, except that of the Supply, 1620-21, contains the name of Giles Carter, nor does it appear on any of the fragmentary census records published, of those living in Virginia during the early colonial period. The only known record of his birth is a sworn statement, in court, of his age, showing the date of his birth as 1634.

A general examination of the Gloucestershire, England, records leads to the conclusion that many of the inhabitants emigrated to America, as a result of the long civil wars, and it was from the Gloucestershire contingent in Virginia that Bacon drew many of his supporters in the so-called Bacon's Rebellion.

Laurance, a graduate of Oxford, who had been deprived of his Virginia property under flimsy pretence of law by Governor Berkeley, was one of those marked for the gallows, but he escaped and plunged into the forests with several companions and returned no more to the settlements. The Virginia records do not show the English parentage of Laurance. The wife of John Carter of Lower Swell, Gloucestershire, was named Mary Laurance; they were the parents of Gyles Carter who married Elizabeth Tracy. There were many members of the Laurance family in Gloucestershire at that period.

The name Giles, or as sometimes spelled Gyles, Carter appears in no other branch of the Carter family in England or Virginia, which has come under the observation of the writer, except those from Gloucestershire. The English records prior to 1550 are very meager, but since that time down to about 1800 the name of Giles appears constantly in this family of Carters in England and Virginia. The names of John and William, habitually used in the Gloucestershire families, have for three centuries been perpetuated in America in the families descended from Giles and Hannah Carter.

It appears quite certain that Giles Carter, born in 1634, whose will was executed in 1699 in Virginia, was descended from the Gloucestershire branch of Carters, and that possibly the record of his birth and parentage may yet be discovered. The family connection of Tracys, Carters and Crewes of Gloucestershire, and perpetuation of the Christian name of Giles, John and William, all tend to prove circumstantially that of which direct evidence is still lacking.

THE COLLATERAL LINES.

No systematic effort has been made to trace all the descendants of Giles¹ and Hannah Carter. The writer has been asked, frequently, concerning individuals believed to be descendants of this family, and he has, therefore, inserted the incomplete records so far as they have become known to him.

The will of Giles² Carter (Second) has not been found, although the parish records show that he long resided in Henrico County. The will of Benjamin Carter makes it appear probable that he was a son of Giles² Carter (Second). No absolute evidence of that fact has yet been found. Giles² Carter (Second) was the only brother of Theodrick² (First). John³ Carter was the only brother of Theodrick³ (Second). The descendants of John³ constitute the collateral lineage bearing the Carter name, next after the descendants of Giles² Carter (Second).

John³, son of Theodrick² (First) and Elizabeth Carter; born —; died 1785; m. Elizabeth —; had issue; fourth generation:

It is not known whether the Theodrick from whose will this information was taken, was a son of Sherwood or of Benjamin Carter.

All the foregoing, relating to collateral lineage, was obtained from wills recorded in Henrico County, Virginia. That which follows pertains to the descendants of Theodrick³ (Second) and Anne Carter of St. Patrick's Parish, Prince Edward County, Virginia, and not previously shown in the direct line of descent. Theodrick³ (Second) and Anne Carter had six sons, John, Theodrick, William, Richard, Waddill and Samuel. The will of William has not been found. That of John is given in the direct line.

THE AUTHOR.

General William Giles Harding Carter was born near Nashville, Tennessee, November 19th, 1851. In 1864, at twelve years of age, he entered the service of the Union Army in the Department of the Cumberland as a mounted dispatch carrier. He was appointed a cadet at West Point at sixteen years of age, and upon graduation in 1873, was assigned to duty on the western frontier, where he continued in active service for twenty-four years, participating in many Indian campaigns. He was several times recommended for brevet promotions and was awarded a Medal of Honor by Congress "for distinguished bravery in action against hostile Apache Indians in rescuing the wounded from under a heavy fire." His services brought him into contact with many tribes of Indians from Dakota to the Mexican border at a time when the country west of the Missouri River was a vast hunting ground. While still in the grade of lieutenant he was the subject of an order from the headquarters of his regiment, the Sixth Cavalry, from which the following extracts are taken: "The Colonel of the regiment takes this opportunity to bear testimony to the many sterling qualities of Lieutenant Carter as an officer, a gentleman and a man. * * * He was adjutant as well as quartermaster during the summer of '81, and on the Cibicu Campaign, and displayed the most conspicuous and distinguished gallantry in the battles of the Cibicu, August 30th, and of Fort Apache, September 1st, 1881."

He commanded his troop as a captain of cavalry in the last campaign on the Plains and participated in the last Indian fight, on January 1st, 1891, near the mouth of Wounded Knee Creek, South Dakota, being recommended for brevet major for his services in action. In 1893 he was detailed as an instructor in the Cavalry Department of the Infantry and Cavalry School for officers. In 1897 he was selected from the list of captains by President Cleveland and promoted as major in the Adjutant-General's Department. When he reached the grade of colonel he was selected by President Roosevelt as brigadier-general. A few days later he was the subject of an unusual order:

" War Department,
Washington, July 21, 1902.

" It is ordered that Brigadier-General William H. Carter, U. S. Army, be, and he is, hereby detailed to act as Adjutant-General of the Army during any absence of the Adjutant-General from this day to the 1st of November, 1902.

(Signed) ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War."

General Carter was a member of the first Army War College Board and a member of the first General Staff of the Army. He was employed by the Secretary of War in devising a reorganization of the army. His services in bringing about the organization of the General Staff were generously mentioned by the Secretary of War in his annual report in this language:

"Special credit is due to Brigadier-General William H. Carter for the exceptional ability and untiring industry which he has contributed to the work of devising, bringing about, and putting into operation the general staff law. He brought thorough and patient historical research and wide experience, both in the line and the staff, to the aid of long-continued, anxious and concentrated thought upon the problem of improving military administration, and if the new system shall prove to be an improvement the gain to the country will have been largely due to him."

While serving as assistant chief of staff, General Carter was sent to England and France to study the systems of supplying horses to the armies of those countries. Upon completion of this duty he was assigned to command the Department of the Visayas in the Philippine Islands, and while there was in charge of a brigade quelling an insurrection in the Island of Samar. Upon returning to the United States, after circumnavigating the globe, he was assigned to command the Department of the Lakes. While serving in that department General Carter commanded the joint maneuver camps of the regular army and national guard in 1906 and 1908. In December, 1908, he was assigned to command the Department of the Missouri with headquarters at Omaha, and was relieved early in the following year and ordered to duty in the Philippine Islands. •

General Carter is the author of "Horses, Saddles and Bridles," a book adopted by the War Department for use of the army and at West Point; "From Yorktown to Santiago"; "Old Army Sketches," and numerous professional and literary articles in the North American Review, Scribner's, Harper's and other publications.
